Overview

The course is offered under the auspices of the Built Environment Interdisciplinary Learning initiative [BEIL] and is open to all students in the Faculty of the Built Environment who have completed at least 96UOC. The courses in this suite are operated independently by their programs, but in parallel, building on the synergies for seeking research grants, generating learning and teaching opportunities, and attracting funding and sponsorship.

This interdisciplinary course offers students an opportunity to work within a collaborative, interdisciplinary environment which draws on students’ disciplinary knowledge and provides students with new skills and knowledge for approaching interdisciplinary projects. Students work together in multidisciplinary teams to research and interpret a variety of public art projects, and to contextualise these projects within professional built environment practice.
