Overview

This course is designed to provide students with an understanding of the financial decision-making required in the commercial air transport industry. Air transport is capital intensive, and the structure of the industry has seen poor returns on this capital over an extended period. Specifically, this course examines (1) the tools for financial decision-making, and (2) the application of those tools by financial managers of airlines and airports. Topics include making investment decisions, financing choices (including leasing), fleeting planning, route economics, hedging financial risks, and airline financial statements.
