Course

Evolution of Human Structure

ANAT2521  6 Units of Credit

Overview

This course introduces students to biological anthropology, the scientific discipline that deals with the adaptations, variability, and evolution of human beings and their living and fossil relatives. Biological anthropology helps us understand who we are, where we come from and where we are going. The course will trace the origins of humans from their early hominin ancestors to modern people. Students will learn the basics of genetics, human anatomy and evolutionary theory. They will investigate the fossil record, study the place of humans in nature, and apply this knowledge to an understanding of modern human biological diversity and the future of humankind. The course is multidisciplinary and the emphasis is on the biosocial approach and interplay of biological, cultural and social factors in understanding Homo sapiens as a dynamic species.
